About CliC+HE project

CliC+HE aims at developing and testing newer non-formal learning/teaching experiences that aim to stimulate students' motivation, enhance their engagement and amplify their contribution to generate a participative environment. Interactive data visualization modalities (virtual, mixed and augmented reality), public art and urban simulation game explorations will be used to generate new learning opportunities and let the students and citizens acquire transferable skills such as complex and multi-disciplinary thinking coming from the nexus between urban planning, human health, environment protection, climate change impact, and knowledge of participatory processes. To this aim, the CliC+HE educational methodology and tools will be developed seamlessly with the contribution and the involvement of representative groups of citizens, professionals and public administrations.
